I.L.G.W.U. Memorial For Dead Of 50 Years Ago Warns Of Fire

In the homes of the New York garment workers, the story of the Triangle Shirtwaist fire is kept alive to this day as a sort of a grim folk tale. The details of the fire have been obscured over the years, but the cry of outrage over girls as young as 13 years, most of them Jewish and Italian, plunging to their deaths from windows of the burning building has never been stilled.

On the fiftieth anniversary date, the International Ladies Garment Workers Union recently held a memorial at the building where the fire occurred, says the New York Times. It is now part of the New York University Washington Square campus and is known as the Brown Building. The garment union unveiled a plaque on the building.

Fire Commissioner Edward F. Cavanagh Jr., who spoke at the memorial, said that "the shadow of another Triangle fire continues to hang over" the area, which he has called "Hell's Hundred Acres."

The fire broke out at 4:45 p.m. on Saturday, March 25, 1911, on the eighth floor of the ten-story Asch Building at the corner of Washington Place and Greene Street, in New York. The three top floors of the loft building were occupied by the Triangle Shirtwaist Company.

Of the company's normal work force of 1,000, there were 625 at work—mostly young women earning some extra Saturday money. The quitting bell had just rung, and the workers were preparing to leave. A few minutes more time and there would have been few, if any, deaths.

Before the blaze was out, 147 workers — some records show 146 — were dead. Thirteen bodies were found in the premises. Most died on the pavement below after they had jumped or been pushed from ninth-floor windows by the press of those behind them.

Others died on the fire escape as flames leaped from the windows to engulf them, or plunged to the back yard as the fire escape buckled from heat and overloading, says the New York Times. And still others died on top of elevator cages as they jumped into the shaft, hoping to slide down the cables.

In the many retellings of the story, emphasis is placed on the fact that the ninth-floor door was locked, cutting off an essential means of escape. The building is most often described as an old-fashioned firetrap that should not have been used as a factory. The latter is untrue. The building had been erected in 1900-01 and was regarded as a modern, fireproof structure.

How the fire started has never been fully established. The most accepted theory is that it began in an accumulation of fabric scraps in a bin under a cutting table on the eighth floor. Efforts were made by some men workers to douse the blaze with water. Significantly, no one went for the fire hoses.

Many laws covering fire-prevention in factory buildings have been enacted in the intervening half-century. Proponents of such legislation continue to harken back to the fire. The International Ladies Garment Workers Union, fighting for even stricter regulations and enforcement, uses the Triangle Shirtwaist fire in its arguments.

The lack of discipline in fighting the fire before it became uncontrollable, and the panic among the employees in trying to get out, highlight arguments by the garment workers union for periodic fire drills in factories, says the New York Times. At the time of

Israel Continues Aid To African Nations Despite Snubs

Israel has decided to continue her programs of technical assistance to Ghana, Guinea and Mali despite the diplomatic embarrassment these countries caused recently.

All three African nations were signatories to a declaration issued at a conference in Casablanca last January that referred to Israel as "an instrument of imperialism and neo-colonialism." The three later rejected expressions of "regret and dismay" that Israel directed to them after the Casablanca statement had been issued.

The United Arab Republic, which also was represented at the Casablanca parley, was believed behind the anti-Israel statement. On several previous occasions African leaders friendly to Israel have disappointed the Israelis by failing to stand up to the Arabs and resist their pressure to snub Israel in one form or another. However, these disappointments have never had material consequences.

In the weeks since then, the Foreign Ministry has made an extensive reassessment of Israel's assistance program, says the New York Times, which now reaches into nearly every country in Africa south of the Sahara Desert. Israel, with her decision to continue the aid program wherever possible and to whatever extent her meager resources will permit, is now negotiating additional projects in the three countries that offended her.

Negotiations with Ghana are nearly concluded on a cooperative farm which Israel will establish there as a model for others to be built throughout the country.

Israel also is expected to announce soon agreements with Guinea and Mali to provide experts to set up programs for science education in those countries. More than 100 Israeli experts are in Ghana. Many Ghanaians are taking courses in Israel and some are participating in economic ventures that have been profitable to Ghana. Vice President Jean-Marie Koné, of Mali, recently signed agreements for technical, economic, and cultural cooperation. There have been no indications that this cooperation will lessen as a result of Mali's participation in the anti-Israel resolution.

Aside from being embarrassed diplomatically, the Israeli Government has had to face considerable resentment at home from critics who contend that the aid effort should be concentrated on the emerging countries in Africa that have demonstrated a more friendly attitude.

However, the Foreign Ministry did not feel that the policies of the three controversial West African countries fundamentally contradicted those of Israel. The Ministry also maintains that Israel has a great practical advantage in keeping the foothold she has made into the Moslem areas close to the more consistently hostile states of North Africa.

Israel has no formal alliances with other nations, and the Arab states on her borders hold varying feelings of animosity toward her, says the New York Times. Thus, Israel's need for friends wherever she can find them is obvious.

Israel also has benefited by the argument that she does not offer assistance and cooperation merely as an advance agent for some greater power. Nevertheless, Soviet-bloc countries that have gained a foothold in Africa — notably in Guinea, the Congo, and the United Arab Republic — have contended in their efforts to supplant the Israelis that that is not the case.

The Soviet-bloc insistence that Israeli aid has Western strings attached to it has not met with much success, largely because the Africans have seen the Western powers competing with the Israelis in many instances. In Ghana, for instance, the British took over the training of the Ghanaian Air Force from the Israelis at the beginning of this month only after a difficult struggle.

The Israelis have not taken the change-over as a loss. Israel will always get credit in Ghana for getting the air force started and for training Ghana's first pilots. She now can use her personnel elsewhere and still has more than 100 experts doing other chores in Ghana.

Israel is working with Ghana in joint economic ventures mostly in construction work, as she is in Nigeria, Liberia, and Sierre Leone. In all cases in which the Israeli Government participates directly, it takes as a matter of principle a 40 per cent interest in the venture and leaves a 60 per cent interest for the host country.

Besides the political advantages that are hoped for, the economic advantages already are beginning to show. Israeli exports to Africa are expected to exceed $11,000,000 this year. Last year they were about $75,000,000.

Israel has been extending her diplomatic relations with African nations as fast as she can manage, says the New York Times. In the last year, Israel has opened embassies in the former French and Belgian Congos and in the Malagasy Republic, Senegal, and Mali.

Polish Envoy To U. S. Tells 3,000 That Nazis Rise Again

Romauld Spasowsky, Polish Ambassador to the United States, accused the German Federal Republic of expansionist aims. The Polish envoy said that it was "the only country in Europe with territorial claims," and that it was "preparing for a new march to the East," says the New York Times. He said that the Bonn Government "gives this policy official encouragement."

His address at the Manhattan Center, in New York, was one of several highlights of an eighteenth-anniversary commemoration of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising. Three thousand persons filled the Center for the meeting, which was held under the auspices of the Committee to Commemorate the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, with headquarters at 1133 Broadway.

The participating organizations were the American Federation of Polish Jews, American Council of Warsaw Jews, Emma Lazarus Federation of Jewish Women's Clubs, Jewish Cultural Clubs and Societies, Jewish Music Alliance, and the Yiddisher Kultur Farband.

The Polish Ambassador, pointing out that he had been in Warsaw at the time of the uprising, said: "I saw against what odds the despairing men and women of the Ghetto had to battle before the end came." Hailing the Jewish men, women, and children who had decided "to die as free men, fighting to the final minute and last drop of blood," Mr. Spasowsky said to "cherish the memory is not enough. As we look westward, to Western Germany, we witness the dangerous swell of movements which demand territorial revisions, which speak of past Germanic 'glory' and future Germanic 'mission,' which call constantly for increased armaments, including nuclear weapons, reports the New York Times."

Mr. Spasowsky told the gathering that "prominent positions of influence" were occupied by "Hitler's generals" in West Germany's army. He posed the question: "Is

Eichmann Trial Hears Salo Baron, Top Jewish Historian, Speak On Ghastly Loss Of Numbers Under Nazis

A Columbia University professor told at the trial of Adolf Eichmann, the Nazi killer, in Jerusalem, of the results of the Nazis' destruction of Jewish communities in Europe in World War II. The witness was Prof. Salo Wittmayer Baron, a Professor of Jewish History, Literature and Institutions at Columbia University since the chair was established in 1950. He has spoken in Canada often.

Eichmann, who was the Gestapo's Jewish expert, had always followed Jewish affairs closely, says the New York Times. This day he sat in his glass cage with his head cupped in his hand, listening attentively to the account of now flourishing Jewish communities had been destroyed.

The professor said there was no accurate figure of the number of Jews killed by Germany because the Nazis had destroyed the records. However, he said, there were 16,500,000 Jews in the world before World War II and 10,500,000 at its end. The figure has risen since then to 12,000,000, he testified.

Professor Baron spoke in Hebrew, and Justice Moshe Landau, president of the court, corrected his usage from time to time. Eichmann and his lawyer, Dr. Robert Servatius, heard simultaneous German translations through earphones. The prisoner showed no outward emotion.

The witness said the 9,800,000 Jews of Europe had been the source of the Jewish communities of the United States, Latin America and the British Commonwealth. Professor Baron said that although a third of the European Jews emigrated in the twenty-four years before the Nazis, the communities continued to flourish, says the New York Times. Conditions in the Nineteen Twenties, he said, were difficult for the Jews because national movements grew more extreme. Economic difficulties developed and anti-Semitism grew.

However, the witness said, the Jews adapted themselves to the conditions and influenced economic development, obtained recognition as a national minority, and contributed to cultural development out of proportion to their numbers. Dr. Baron was asked to describe the situation after the war. The ruddy and stocky professor sighed.

The town of his birth, Tarnov in Galicia, had a Jewish population of 20,000 when he visited there in 1938, Professor Baron said. When he visited Tarnov in 1958, he found only twenty Jews. "That is typical of the situation," the Professor said sadly.

According to the historian, there were more than 2,000 towns in Poland with Jewish populations before the war. After the Nazi era, he said, there were Jews in only 224.

Before the war, Dr. Baron said, there were 3,300,000 Jews in Poland and after the war there were 73,353.

Of nearly 500,000 Jews in Germany, only 15,000 to 20,000 remained, the professor testified.

Discussing anti-Semitism through history, the historian said in reply to a question that the most striking difference in the Nazi's approach was that they employed "racial anti-Semitism."

In the darkest period of the Middle Ages, Professor Baron said, Jews were able to evade persecution by embracing Christianity. "But racial anti-Semitism turned the prejudice into a biological thing, an unalterable law," he said.

"If there was a man who had not known himself that one of his parents or a grandparent had been Jewish, this, in Nazi eyes, made him a Jew irrevocably."

Professor Baron objected to a comparison of the Nazis' persecution to that in the Middle Ages, when Jews were pushed into ghettos, compelled to wear special badges, and prohibited from marrying gentiles, says the New York Times.

"What is forgotten," he said, "is that in the Middle Ages life was characterized by a certain degree of internal order. Every state was divided into different societies, the clergy, the barons, the guilds, with separate privileges and duties. The Jews represented a separate society."

Under the Nazis, it was observed, all Germans had equal rights but only one per cent of them — the Jews — were divided off.

Scarcely four months before Hitler came to power in Germany, a young professor of Jewish history of Columbia University warned the Jewish people that they faced a crisis comparable to those that followed the first and second destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem. Dr. Salo Wittmayer Baron was not predicting Hitler's "final solution of the Jewish question" — which he testified upon at the trial in Jerusalem of Adolf Eichmann.

What he had in mind in October, 1932, was the loss of economic and religious identity, the falling birth rate, and the assimilation that followed emancipation, equality, and the break-up of the old type of Jewish community life. He called on Jewish leaders to "mold

One of the loveliest qualities of New-Recipe Kraft Mayonnaise is its delightful freshness. Equally pleasing is its delicious flavor . . . now with a whisper of zest that comes from pure lemon juice . . . just the right amount, beaten in a special way. And this velvety-textured mayonnaise never separates, never curdles. Try Kraft's fresh-made Mayonnaise—you'll know it's the best!

HEBREW FREE LOAN

Association made loans of $10,261,000 to 53,323 borrowers in the last half-century, it was reported at the fiftieth annual meeting, at 5775 Victoria Avenue. William Levy, elected president for the fiftieth year, reported that the Free Loan Association has maintained a high level of public service in the community over the past year. In 1960 the sum of $838,000 was loaned to 1,177 borrowers. He compared the figures with 1950 when $341,745 was loaned to 958. The president said the object of the Association, which was founded in 1911 by the late Zigmond Fineberg, was to lend money to any one in need without ever charging interest, and that in fifty years losses have not been more than one-half of one per cent. Mr. Levy said the population expansion portends increasing demands on the service. "For the Free Loan to continue effective public service, the directors and subscribers must adopt a long term plan that is courageous and assiduously applied. Charges and increasing responsibilities must be envisioned to meet all demands. This includes service to increased numbers of foreigners and local citizens through their rough periods of adjustment." Mr. Levy paid tribute to the dedication of all board members who contribute their time for the benefit of others. He said the Montreal community is becoming more aware of the Association's contribution, but expressed hope that even more people with financial problems will learn of the Free Loan. He thanked the subscribers whose donations helped to build manhood instead of making paupers; and helped to prevent an increased number of public charges. Myer Caplan read the financial statement. Other officers elected were: Harry Gasco, Joseph Guttman, vice-presidents; David Kaufman, honorary secretary; Abraham Albert, Hyman Shiller, honorary vice-presidents; also Harry Gordon, Hyman Grover, Henry Nathanson, Aaron Nirenberg, honorary directors; Isak Aspler, David Becker, J. Someone called us up after reading our ad last week and said: "Gee, if all your musicians and entertainers are television stars the way you said, I'd die paying the bill."

All right then, we exaggerated just a little. Not ALL our entertainers are television performers, although nearly all of them know one end of a TV camera from t'other.

The girl who plays bass on a lot of our engagements is one of the Hames Sisters; Tommy Ambrose is one of our "regulars"; and if one of your kids is a jazz fan, he'll know Paul Hoffert.

The cost? We think we can give you a pleasant surprise there. Call us and see.

What To Do With Public Money

Now that the Toronto campaign of the United Jewish Appeal, a philanthropic organization of the people and by the people, for the people in need, is over, here are the official minutes of a meeting of the administrative committee which granted a one-year subsidy of $18,000 to the Canadian Jewish News, of Toronto, the publishers of which are Meyer W. Gasner, chairman of the Central Region of the Canadian Jewish Congress, and J. Irving Oelbaum who has been trusted with many offices in communal organizations. These minutes came to the Canadian Jewish Review some time ago as an unsolicited gift from the plain people who want this love feast between the interlocking directorates of the Big Three organizations in Toronto aired, unveiled, and visible:

Tuesday, January 31, 1961, 12:30 p.m. 150 Beverley Street.

Mark A. Levy	Harry Zitkin
J. Irving Oelbaum
Alvin B. Rosenberg, Q.C.	Dr. George Liban
Samuel J. Sable
Morris B. Kaufman (Visitor)

Florence Hutner

Mr. Brown presided; Miss Numan recorded the minutes.

Miss Hutner read the minutes of the Meeting of January 5, 1961, which were approved as read.

Business from Minutes

Mr. Allen moved that the matter of the Allocations Formula for the 1961 campaign be re-opened for further discussion. This motion was seconded. The Chairman stated that a two-third majority was required to approve this motion, which was forthcoming, and the motion was carried.

Canadian Jewish News

The background of the recommendation from the Board of Directors of the Canadian Jewish News, the decisions of the Executive Committee of the Welfare Fund, and the considerations of the Sub-committee representative of the Welfare Fund, the Toronto Zionist Council, and the Administrative Committee of the U.J.A. which met to consider this proposal, were presented.

The following recommendation was placed before the meeting, as the recommendation of the Sub-committee noted above:

> That a maximum of 7,200 one-year subscriptions to the Canadian Jewish News, at the rate of $2.50 per subscription, be sent to a non-duplicated mailing list, as selected by the office of the United Jewish Appeal.
> The above was duly moved and seconded.

The meeting was also advised that it is hoped that those persons receiving the Canadian Jewish News will become subscribers to the Canadian Jewish News; as they do, their names will be eliminated from the sponsored list.

The discussion then continued with various speakers: It was pointed out that at the meeting of the Sub-Committee, it was the opinion that this proposal is a straightforward one which would benefit the Welfare Fund, the United Jewish Appeal and affiliated agencies, by using the Canadian Jewish News as the medium to educate the Jewish community with current issues, locally, Israel and Overseas, and thereby resulting in greater support to the U. J. A.

It was also stated that it is envisaged that with these additional subscriptions to the Canadian Jewish News, it is possible that two copies of the U.J.A. News could be eliminated, which would offset part of the cost.

It was the general understanding that the proposal will cover one year only.

Various opinions were expressed concerning general support to the Yiddish and Anglo-Jewish press, the recommendation that any newspaper given support be printed by union printer, and the possible misinterpretation of the proposal.

It was also pointed out that the Canadian Jewish News is a newspaper and therefore more widely read than a periodical; it was also stated that the Welfare Fund subsidizes a Yiddish Newsletter, issued jointly by the United Jewish Welfare Fund and the Canadian Jewish Congress, which has a mailing list of approximately 500. It was stated that the subscriptions are being offered to the U. J. A. at $2.50 per subscription, whereas the actual subscription fee is $5.00. An undertaking was made that any profits earned by the newspaper will be given to the U. J. A. as a contribution.

The Chairman asked that for the record, the members of the Administrative Committee present, who were also on the Board of Directors of the Canadian Jewish News be recorded, and they were listed as follows:

> Stephen E. Berger, Meyer W. Gasner, Mark A. Levy, Louis Lockshin, J. Irving Oelbaum, David Peters, Q.C., Alvin B. Rosenberg, Q.C., Samuel J. Sable.
> The Motion was then taken to a vote and carried.

Motion:

It was regularly moved, seconded and carried that a Sub-Committee be formed to explore areas in which the U.J.A. may utilize other press media to advantage.

As you have seen above, out of the fourteen members of the United Jewish Appeal committee present, not counting staff, nine, including Morris B. Kaufman, "Visitor", were on the board of directors of the Canadian Jewish News and argued and voted their own interest in a matter involving public money. Times are very hard in the publication sector for these "top leaders", money very tight, especially considering the fact, obvious at a glance to any experienced person, that the year-old Canadian Jewish News must have lost at least $30,000 since its wild-eyed arrival, and for various reasons stands to lose much more.

But there is a Santa Claus: To help out the United Jewish Welfare Fund, the United Jewish Appeal, and affiliated agencies, the Canadian Jewish News could be used "as the medium to educate" the Jewish community about the needs of Toronto, Israel and overseas. In addition, at a bargain price of $2.50 for each subscription, 7,200 one-year subscriptions, amounting to $18,000, the public could have a lovely present bought with public money and the Canadian Jewish News could get down off the hook for a little breather and hope for an indefinite continuation of this quaint relationship as a hobby.

This will explain to puzzled Toronto recipients how they happen to be getting free copies which some of them do not want even without cost. The Canadian Jewish News has been hard pressed to show "paid" circulation but there is more than one kind of this commodity. To the trade, circulation paid for by a community organization is free circulation and often gets a balky reception. And paid circulation also means circulation bought and paid for by the individual, the only valid kind since it is sought for and therefore read.

Apparently, the price of education has gone up alarmingly. Is it not the function of communal journals to publicize the work of the organizations without charge? The Canadian Jewish Review, which does not accept complimentary tickets of any kind, or free banquet meals, and has never been offered a subsidy to decline, has been assisting communal endeavors for many years, and seldom with any thanks, written or expressed.

The Toronto community for years has been giving millions of dollars to causes and philanthropic undertakings without the help of the Canadian Jewish News. Its scheme all of a sudden, to "educate" the Jewish community to contribute more so that the News could claim thereby to give value received for the $18,000, would be laughable were it not so transparently cynical. No wonder these gentlemen were a trifle sensitive to "the possible misinterpretation of the proposal"!

Well, this big deal is the kind of unfortunate thing that can happen when watchers nod and doze a little and turn their heads the other way too often; and natural fighters for the right lose their starch in the brazen presence of their owners; and others retreat or remain silent before the power complex of bullies, a community having come by default under the iron hand of intimidation. This clutch must be lifted or else broken.

The United Jewish Appeal money was not gathered by hard-working collectors to subsidize a private newspaper property of any kind. Some of it does come from men who are merely ravenous for homage, but not all. Remember the plain people with compassionate hearts and minds who feel better for having given. The United Jewish Appeal is not sacrosanct by any means, but they are. They are the ones who really gave for the sad, the mad; the lame, the halt, the blind; the hopeless, the hapless, the homeless; the poor, the dispossessed. What to do with public money? Return it.

The Jewish Public And The Day School: A Subject Awaiting Attention

BY PHILIP LEVY, 606 VICTORIA AVENUE, MONTREAL

The following appeared as a letter to the Congress Bulletin of the Canadian Jewish Congress.

The Canadian Jewish Congress and its affiliated bodies have been meeting recently for discussions in regard to Canadian Education Week and I understand that a committee of the Council of Jewish Educational Institutions has also met on the same general subject. I presented some views to the Congress Education Committee on Oct. 27/60 last but am afraid that they have been ignored and given no thought or consideration.

Certainly among the delegates to the National Education Conference as well as in the bodies above mentioned the opinion is strongly pro-day school, but the percentage of Jewish children who attend these schools (about 10% to 12%) provides a pretty clear indication that the Jewish public regards them with uncertainty if not with outright suspicion.

The resolutions passed at the National Education Conference last year were hastily drafted and passed without discussion and while they may represent the opinions of a majority of the special and, granted, a sincere resolutions committee, do not represent or reflect general Jewish thinking correctly on the subject of Parochial schools and should not be considered as binding on Congress or the community. Many Jews feel that our children should not be segregated but should get their secular education in the schools our taxes help support and that the Jewish Schools generally should lay their whole emphasis and teaching on subjects of urgent need to us as Jews.

On the basis of estimates given me last October it is costing the Jewish community over $800,000.00 for that part of Jewish children's educations to which they are entitled in the secular schools without other cost than the taxes we must pay for anyway, and which is therefore being paid for twice.

This cost will rise as our population increases. Furthermore if we do not use those services and facilities, the Protestant Board might soon stop providing these services our taxes pay for.

We will then find that, as history shows, rights and freedoms once lost are difficult to regain, and, once whittled down or disregarded and neglected, they cease to be realities.

I feel deeply about Jewish education and know that as a Jew the child needs schools to teach him his Hebrew language, his religion and history and to familiarize him with Jewish practices and with our customs and ceremonies. These schools seem to achieve the best results when affiliated with a synagogue which becomes not only a place of prayer but an additional medium of Jewish education.

The role of the synagogue in preserving Judaism over the centuries cannot be over-estimated. Our survival as Jews depends on our maintaining our religion in the home and synagogue. Our survival as Canadians, even from childhood, depends on our getting along in friendship and good neighbourliness with our fellowmen of other faiths.

The future of our children in the parochial schools now may, in later life, reveal the tragedy of a small minority in the Canadian democracy living as segregated nationalists rather than as citizens taking our full place and using what influence we may have for our country as a whole. This is fully compatible with the educating and training of our children outside the secular schools in their special requirements of religion, language, history, love of the land, and people of Israel, etc.

President Label Katz of Bnai Brith once said we have to live everywhere and extravagant nationalism is a folly. We do not want a 20th century emotion and prejudice but, in a factual and realistic manner, having in mind the future of the young student as a grown man or woman and a Canadian and not merely as a segregated Jew.

It behooves us therefore not to allow a small minority to force us onto the road from which it will be most difficult to return when we realize, as we surely will, sooner or later, that we have led our young into a ghetto and that history has shown us that once we have built a wall around ourselves we are most vulnerable to attack and find it most difficult to escape again into the present day civilization from which we deliberately segregated ourselves.

POLISH ENVOY

it not true that the West German Government helps revisionism and does nothing to stop it?"

He called attention to what he described as the "growth and encouragement of organizations in West Germany composed of those who fled with the Nazis from Poland, Czechoslovakia, and elsewhere."

"They have gathered in hundreds of thousands at meetings which must recall the tremendous rallies at which Nazis once aroused their followers," he said.

A feature of the anniversary was the lighting of six candles in memory of the 6,000,000 Jews who died in the Hitler regime. Kalman Friedman, president of the American Council of Warsaw Jews, and Simon Federman, president of the American Federation of Polish Jews, spoke. Cantor David Kusevitsky chanted the Hebrew prayer for the dead, says the New York Times. A group of songs was presented by a combined chorus under the direction of Samuel R. Goldman.

EICHMANN TRIAL HEARS SALO BARON

a new Jewish life, adapting the past culture and history to the present, and demonstrate the continuity."

Salo (pronounced like swallow) Baron (like alone) was born into a well-to-do and cultivated Austrian Jewish family in what is now Poland, sixty-six years ago next month.

In Vienna during World War I, he plunged deep into Jewish and other studies. He received his doctorate in philosophy in 1917, in political science in 1922, and in law the following year, says the New York Times. Meanwhile, he had qualified in theological studies as a rabbi and taught history at a school for Jewish teachers from 1919 to 1925.

The late Dr. Stephen S. Wise brought the scholar to New York in 1925 as a visiting lecturer at the Jewish Institute of Religion. He remained to become director of the Institute's Department of Advanced Studies.

In 1930, the Miller Foundation established a professorship in Jewish History, literature and Institutions at Columbia University. He was chosen to fill the chair. Fellow-scholars at Columbia soon discovered the breadth of scope of their new colleague — and his willingness to take on extra burdens.

An economist suggested to a Doctor of Philosophy candidate preparing a thesis on Jewish banking that she consult Professor Baron. Jeannette G. Meisel, the candidate, saw Professor Baron but has not yet completed her thesis. Instead they were married in 1934. They have two daughters. One is a lawyer married to a lawyer, Robert S. Tancan, now living with a small son and daughter in Buenos Aires. The other is Mrs. Gene L. Gitelle, wife of a New York psychiatrist, with an infant daughter.

His colleagues find him affable with a pleasant turn of wit, not seeking to dominate, says the New York Times. But often they prefer to watch him reach back into a phenomenal memory to illustrate and expound a view. Of medium height, on the stocky side, he looks younger than his years and does not use glasses.

The Barons established a home in Canaan, Conn., near the Massachusetts line. They named the house Yifat Shalom, a combination of their Hebrew names, which they translate as "Beauty of Peace." Since the children grew up they spend the winter at an apartment near the University, but from April to November they are in the countryside.

The professor enjoys mowing the lawn and trimming the trees and shrubs. In the city, his exercise is long walks. How then, does he manage to be a prolific writer, to lecture, work with graduate students, and sit on academic committees?

The answer is that prodigious memory, which amazes his family and colleagues. He can walk and work at the same time. He lectures without notes in five languages.

Dr. Baron's great life work is "A Social and Religious History of the Jews." It was published in three volumes in 1937. A revised edition began with two volumes in 1952. Eight have now appeared, and the expanded story is not yet past the medieval period, says the New York Times. When Columbia established a Center of Israeli Studies in 1950, he was chosen its director.

the fire, Fire Commissioner Rhinelander Waldo said:

"The loss of more than 140 lives resulting from the Washington Place fire has demonstrated forcibly the contention of the Fire Department that while buildings may be fireproof, the contents are not fireproof."

And the present Fire Commissioner, Cavanagh, echoed the warning: "Fifty years or fifty decades will not dim the horror or tragedy of fire. The shadow of another Triangle fire continues to hang over that area. In recent years there have been three major fires in the area, which have cost the lives of firemen and workers.

"I am determined to prosecute every law and regulation of the Fire Department to bring about the greatest degree of fire prevention possible in that area. I have designated it as 'Hell's Hundred Acres,' and I will so call it until I am satisfied that every possible step to minimise the fire threat has been taken."
